“I endured the worst experience of my life”

What happened?
The trauma, the courage--the advocacy!

Anna's story of teen dating violence in the WMC Fbomb:

“February is Teen Dating Violence Awareness Month, but the Impact of Violence is Long-Lasting”

“

As a freshman, I was swept off of my feet by a varsity athlete almost three years older than me.

The abuse was gradual and escalated. I didn't report. He'd abused other girls. Varsity athletes were untouchable.

I was too young to recognize the warning signs of abuse. I couldn't move forward without professional help.

I endured the worst experience of my life, remained at school, and graduated.

I completed the end of my college education at home to work through unresolved trauma.

I'm sharing my experience and pointing others to resources by volunteering with SASH Club (Students Against Sexual Harassment). Their Teen Dating Violence resource details the warning signs I failed to recognize.

SASH Club helps teens stay safe and make change. Join me sharing SASH Club.

School benefits

“I frequently had to educate the school community on the obligations of schools to allow a GSA (then known as Gay Straight Alliance). The right of students to establish a GSA (or a SASH Club) at school is guaranteed by both the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and the federal Equal Access Act as long as other student clubs are allowed. Educating students on their rights and giving them a voice to rectify injustices is an instrumental goal of schooling.”

Connecticut Title IX Coordinator

SASH Club recruitment

Jordan High School students Jane and Daniel Golonka describe how they started a club in their blog, "SASH Club: Shifting School Culture to Combat Sexual Harassment".

Daniel: "We walked around with fliers and donuts to tell people about our club. We also put catchy ads in the school announcements and talked to a writer from our student newspaper about the club. We posted flyers at school and reminders on social media."

Jane: "We set up a table at the activity fair at our school's open house in August. We told our friends, posted on our personal social media, and created an Instagram page."

SASH Club early accomplishments

Jordan High School students Jane and Daniel Golonka describe their early accomplishments.

Daniel: “I’m especially excited about the research and evaluation committee, which will identify issues that Jordan students are most concerned about. It will work to evaluate the impact the club may have on the school climate.”

Jane: “I am really proud of the connections we have already made within the school, in the larger Durham community. It is heartening to see so many people willing to support our efforts. I am grateful to attend a school that supports the club’s efforts from administration to most of the students.”
